- Total active listings of 770 units (+22.6% versus last year) remained on the ultra high side despite the spurt in recent volume
- Heavy supply continued to curtail potential price growth with the average October price coming in at $588,672 - down by 6.1% versus last year

Tipping is customary in any service industry, but what about your condo staff: the concierge, custodians, property manager, and so on? A tip is never required, but if you want to show your appreciation for all the hard work they've done this year, the holidays are a good time to do it. After all, they're the ones who hold on to your packages, keep the common areas clean, and make sure the building is safe and secure. Here are some common questions around tipping your condo staff.

Do I have to tip?

No, you don't have to tip. You shouldn't feel guilty if you are not in the position to give this holiday season.

Who do I tip?

The list of people who work in your condo can run very long, so tipping everyone may not be realistic. Tip the people who you interact with regularly, who has helped you out this year, or who you think has gone the extra mile to make your building a better place to live.

How much should I tip?

The amount you tip is really up to you and varies depending on how much you interact with the person you're tipping and how much they've done for you. Remember, a tip is not expected so any amount you give will be appreciated.

What if my building has a tipping pool?

Before you hand out your tips, you may want to check if your building is organizing a tipping pool. Tipping pools allow residents to contribute any amount they wish and stay anonymous. The pool is then divided up and distributed to staff members according to seniority. This is a good option if you're unfamiliar with the staff members, or if you're unable to give more. However, if you prefer to give your tip individually, you may choose to do that instead.

Can I give gifts instead?

Yes, there are more ways than giving money to show your gratitude. If you know what they like, some alternatives include bottles of wine, gift cards, baked goods, chocolate, and fruit baskets.

Should you tip
your condo staff
this holiday?
